California YC (above) officially opened season with formal ceremony on lawn outside clubhouse.

Marina YC's Share Opening Day

Most of the YC's with clubhouse facilities at Marina del Rey held their official Opening Day ceremonies this year on Sunday, April 20, with events planned on a timetable designed to permit attendance at each by members of all other participating YC's.

Sharing this year's opening day, in the order of their respective ceremonies, were: Pacific Mariners' YC, Del Rey YC, California YC, Windjammers' YC, and South Coast Corinthians YC.

Long a tradition among YC's, the origin of annual Opening Day ceremonies each year goes back to the time when yachting was regarded as a more strictly seasonal sport than now.

At the peak of the American whaling days, vessels left the Eastern ports of the United States for voyages which lasted up to four years. It was during the long hours, days, and months of these whaling voyages that the art of scrimshaw was developed.

Although some of it was done on whalebone or shells, the whaling sailors' favorite objects for carving or etching were the large teeth of the sperm whale. These teeth, which are embedded very deep in the whale's jaw, were extracted by first soaking the jaw in sea water, boiling it, then finishing up with a hammer and chisel. Preparing the surface of the tooth, which is normally rough, was begun with a file or knife, after which it was polished smooth with the skin of a shark used as sandpaper.

If the whaler was a practiced artist, he might carve his picture free-hand. More often the outline of the desired picture was done with lead pencil, then the lines scratched in with a sharp pointed nail or jacknife. Another method used was that of placing a tracing over the tooth, then perforating it with a line of dots. Scratches and dots of the finished pictures were filled in with ink. Teeth scrimshawed by American whalers out of Nantucket, New Bedford, and Sag Harbor during the heyday of American whaling (1840-1850) now command some very high prices from collectors of this kind of art.

New Marker For Shoal

A floating marker (photo) has been installed by the Marina del Rey Harbor Patrol as an added warning to boaters of the shoal at the Marina's south entrance. The marker is eight feet tall, contains three warning signs each three by four feet in size, plus three flasher lights, and is mounted on a floating five by eight foot concrete platform. It will remain in position until further notice.

The shoal is a deposit of sand and silt deposited by the flood control channel in La Ballona Creek during this past winter's heavy storms. It is about 300' wide and extends out approximately 400' from the south jetty towards the detached breakwater. At normal tides it lies at a depth of about three to five feet. In addition to the new marker, red buoys will continue as in the past to mark the deepwater channel about 100' wide between itself and the detached breakwater.

Get up off the street and on the bridge!

(of the Remarkable Uniflite 31.)

Maybe you're chasing albacore.

Maybe you're running away from home.

Maybe you've been stuck morning and night on the freeway for five consecutive days and you'd like to move fast for a change.

Anyway, you're on the bridge, and you've just unthrottled 632 cubic inches of twin V-8 power, and you're hoping that the hull designer knew what he was doing because you're in the mood to test his creation pretty good today.

If your bridge is on a Uniflite hull, relax a little. When the Navy went shopping for a fast Vietnam patrol boat, they ended up with a fleet of Uniflite 31s. And, little by little, Uniflite became the Navy's biggest supplier of fiberglass boats.

Scan the Pacific from the Uniflite bridge. Check out the Navy's choice.

Del Amo does more than sell Uniflites.

Example: Join our classes in navigation, basic and celestial.

Look into our service center. When you select a yacht, find out where it's going to be serviced.

In addition to our Uniflites, we have exclusive franchises for Avenger yachts (hulls designed by Jim Wynne and Walt Walters) and Stardust, the houseboats with the oceangoing deep V fiberglass hulls.

Del Amo is a new concept in services for the yachtsman . . . manned by yachtsmen to get you up off the street and on the bridge!

Del Amo Marine Center, 4305 Lincoln Blvd., Del Amo Service Center, 685 Oxford Avenue, Marina del Rey, California. Phone: (213) 391-7284.
